The body of Amy Paul, 27, was found on Sept. 17, 2013, in a field southeast of Ottawa. FACEBOOK

Career crook says he didn't kill Amy Paul

'I swear to God.'

Jacques Rouschop says police investigation has ruined his reputation

TREVOR GREENWAY

trevor.greenway@metronews.ca

A career crook says Ottawa police have ruined his reputation by linking him to the investigation into the killing of sex worker Amy Paul and he wants to clear his name.

Speaking from the Ottawa-Carleton Detention Centre on Innes Road, where he's being detained on unrelated sexual assault charges, Jacques Rouschop, 41, told Metro while he knows most of the street girls in Vanier, he has never once met Paul and had nothing to do with her Sept. 3 murder.

"They gave my lawyer some documents saying that they found blood in my truck and it was all lies, I swear to God," Rouschop told Metro during a Wednesday afternoon phone interview from the Innes Road jail.

Rouschop's lawyer, Stuart Konyer, would neither confirm nor deny if police said they found any blood in the truck.

"They know they can't get away with it, because I was doing that theft the night this girl was killed and they have to know this for 100 per cent."

Jacques Rouschop, who says surveillance video clearly shows him stealing lawn tractors the night of the murder.

Rouschop says key evidence — a surveillance video — places him in another town, stealing lawn tractors, on the night Paul is believed to have been killed.

"They know they can't get away with it, because I was doing that theft the night this girl was killed and they have to know this for 100 per cent," he said.

The body of 27-year-old Paul was found in a rural Ottawa hay field Sept. 17.

Ottawa police barged into Rouschop's mom's home Oct. 24 with a search warrant.

The warrant, obtained by Metro, states police were searching for a "grey cellular flip phone, female shoes believed to belong to Amy Paul and female pants believed to belong to Amy Paul."

Several media outlets leaked Rouschop's name in December, saying he was going to be questioned by police on the disappearance of Paul.

He says has not been questioned.

The suggested link to Paul has had detrimental effects on Rouschop and his 65-year-old mother.

Rouschop says a threatening package was delivered to his mom's doorstep in December. The search at her home has left her hiding indoors from neighbours for fear they will ask if her son is a killer.

Police also seized Rouschop's Ford pickup. Rouschop says they claimed they found Paul's blood in the back seat.

Rouschop, who told Metro he is a driver for commercial thieves, has yet to be charged for the murder.

It's important to note Rouschop's DNA has been on file since 2005, when he was ordered to submit it to the sex-offender registry. Police also returned Rouschop's truck, a seemingly unlikely move if it was involved in a homicide.

Nobody has been formally charged in connection with Paul's murder.

Gov't retirees to see premium bump

Federal public servants will have to pay more for retirement health benefits under an agreement that one union says was negotiated with a gun to the heads of retirees.

Under the deal, announced by Treasury Board President Tony Clement, premiums paid by retirees for those benefits will double for all but those with the lowest incomes.

Both sides made compromises to reach a deal on the changes to the Public Service Health Care Plan, Clement said. He called the agreement fair.

But the unions had little choice but to negotiate, said the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada.

"While we are opposed to these changes, it was made clear to us that if we didn't come to an agreement, these changes would be legislated," said a statement from the union.

Retired civil servants pay 25 per cent of their premiums, while taxpayers pay 75 per cent. Under the new agreement, premiums will be split 50-50.

Clement says the deal will save the government $6.7 billion over six years.

The new cost-sharing will be phased in over four years.

Clement says low-income pensioners will not be subject to the 50-50 formula and the plan's annual deductible is being eliminated.

Low income is defined as $16,728 for a single person and $22,080 for a couple.

Civil servants will have to put in six years of pensionable service instead of two to be eligible for benefits.

'We just want somebody to say sorry': Mother

Eric Leighton Inquest.
Too much blame put on students: Sheri Leighton

OONA WOODS
ottawa@metronews.ca

Three days of testimony about the death of Eric Leighton in a 2011 Mother Teresa High School shop class has brought new information to light, but not the one thing his parents were hoping to hear.

Speaking outside the coroner's inquest, Leighton's mother Sheri said they have learned details from the day when the oil drum her son was working on exploded after being ignited by sparks from a grinder, but no one wants to admit responsibility.

"A lot of the blame still seems to be put on the (students).... We just want somebody to say, 'I'm sorry,' you know, 'We made a mistake,'" she said. "Everybody wants to hide behind lawyers."

Allan O'Brien, a lawyer for the Ottawa Catholic School Board and its teachers, said the inquest shouldn't be confused with a civil suit between the family and the board.

"The inquest is so the public will know what happened," explained O'Brien. "And steps can be taken to make sure it doesn't happen again."

Ministry of Education lawyer Christopher Thompson asked principal Mary Ellen Agnel if it was normal to work on a barbecue in a class called Transportation Technology.

"I trusted my teachers completely," replied Agnel. "Sometimes there weren't cars to work on."

Kevin Nearing, a former shop class teacher, told the inquest working on projects not directly related to transport isn't unusual because it teaches transferable skills. He said smaller classes of 16 rather than 21 would be safer and easier to monitor.

Eric Leighton's parents, Sheri and Pat, speak with reporters outside a coroner's inquest into Eric's death in a shop class at Mother Teresa High School in 2011.

Homes evacuated after ammo found

Gatineau police and Sûreté du Québec officers locked down a residential neighbourhood after finding "high-calibre" military ammunition inside a vacant apartment.

Gatineau police responded to a call around 2 p.m. and formed a 100-yard perimeter around an address close to 236 rue du Louvre. They evacuated 50 to 75 people from the area and rerouted a school bus.

Gatineau police spokesman Jean-Paul Lemay said there were no explosives found. Police later sent out a press release to say the equipment posed no imminent danger and the perimeter was reduced to the targeted area.

Lab experiment hospitalizes kids

A school chemistry experiment gone wrong sent nine students to the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario on Wednesday.

Ottawa paramedics were called to the Higher Learning Institute, at 3047 Carling Ave., at 12:17 p.m., when a student mixing chemicals produced chlorine gas, causing eye and throat irritations and shortness of breath.

Paramedics assessed 11 students after the school of roughly 30 students, ages 10 to 17, was evacuated. Frank Lalonde, public information officer for the Ottawa Paramedic Service, said the gas probably spread through the ventilation system. LUCY SCHOLEY/METRO

Sandy Hill. Ottawa city council rejects nine-storey student housing

Sandy Hill residents will not see a new nine-storey student housing building sprout up in their neighbourhood anytime soon.

City councillors voted 14-9 against the controversial project Wednesday morning. Six buildings would have been demolished along Laurier Avenue East and Friel Street, near the University of Ottawa, to make way for the mixed-use 180-unit building.

Developer Viner Assets proposed the plan and the city's planning committee had recommended it be approved.

But in a rare move, council members voted against the committee, shooting down the proposed zoning bylaw change that would have allowed for the "mid-rise" building.

Ottawa Mayor Jim Watson

Appeal still possible

Developer Viner Assets could still appeal the decision to the Ontario Municipal Board.

said he "didn't feel comfortable" with the project because it was not compatible with the Sandy Hill heritage district.

"It was not going to be associated with the university, yet it was going to be a de facto student residence with 24-hour security on it," he said.

He also said that once the Light Rail Transit (LRT) project is finished, it will no longer be necessary for all University of Ottawa students to live within two blocks of campus.

Coun. Mathieu Fleury said he was "happily surprised" that the plan was shot down. He said this change would have had negative impacts on the community.

"We're also sending a clear message that the university has its own responsibility," he said. "It needs to build student housing on campus."

Sandy Hill resident Martha Scott said the building was poorly planned from the start.

"It's an absolute abomination on the streetscape," she said. LUCY SCHOLEY/METRO

Children's Theatre Festival. Plays 'great' for experience, outreach, says drama teacher

TANYA KIRNISHNI
ottawa@metronews.ca

Students at a local high school that specializes in arts education are putting on a free show for young children.

Canterbury High School will host their annual Children's Theatre Festival on April 12 at 900 Canterbury Ave. The festival has been around for more than 15 years as part of the school's drama program.

"It's a nice symbiotic relationship — our kids get a great experience in doing live theatre and it serves us in terms of outreach," said Drama teacher Jeff Lawson.

The Grade 11 drama students are responsible for producing, directing and performing the show, as well as everything in between from set design to costumes. They also engage with the community and spread the word about Canterbury's Art Program by entertaining kids at elementary schools around the city.

"We get to do a lot of performance, but being exposed to the technical aspects is really amazing," says Samantha Pierre, a Grade 11 student. She adds that the festival is a great experience in working with kids because they provide a very different kind of audience.

"It's about getting up there and being silly," says Pierre.

The festival features six different plays, four of which were written by former Grade 12 Canterbury students. Aimed at children ages four to 10 the festival will have a variety of activities including face painting and a magic show by Gabe Roberge. Although the shows are free, donations are always welcome.

"It's accessible and lots of fun for everyone," says Lawson.

Chow to Ford: 'It's time to take down the circus tent'

Toronto. Scandal-plagued mayor accused of having made the city 'an international embarrassment' during live televised debate

Toronto's scandal-plagued mayor held his own against several concerted attacks during Wednesday's first televised mayoral debate as he seeks to stay in office come October.

Rob Ford, who frequently rolled his eyes, stared at the ceiling and flashed grins at the audience, defended his fiscal record as he shot back at the candidates vying to replace him.

"Four years ago, I was elected to stop the gravy train," Ford said, thumping a familiar drum. "I have stopped the gravy train."

Former NDP MP Olivia Chow was quick to shoot him down: "It's time for you to go because your gravy train has turned into a train wreck," Chow said. "You need to pack up that nonsense you're talking about."

Chow was the first candidate to allude directly to, but not mention, Ford's well-known problems — including smoking crack and spouting obscenities on live TV — that have made him talk-show fodder and made him a recognizable name around the world.

Ford was frequently content to let the others debate among themselves, but didn't hesitate to jump in.

Former provincial PC party

Up for debate

"We've had it with the scandals and lack of truth. It's time to go because you're embarrassing our city." Olivia Chow, to Rob Ford leader John Tory said Ford had "run out of gas" given his inability to get anything through a council that has stripped him of most of his powers. He accused the mayor of letting taxpayers down and ruining the city's reputation.

Mostly, though, it was Chow and Ford who went at each other during the two-hour debate. "It's time to take down the circus tent at city hall," Chow said, saying the mayor had made Toronto "an international embarrassment."

Voters will choose whether Ford remains in office or will be replaced Oct. 27.

Grain. Legislation tabled by the feds aims to clear transportation backlog

The federal government has tabled legislation aimed at increasing the movement of grain that has been left sitting in bins across the Prairies due to a transportation bottleneck.

The legislation proposes the Canadian Grain Commission regulate how much a grain company will pay to a farmer if the company doesn't meet delivery dates set out in a contract.

It also aims to extend what are called inter-switching limits from 30 kilometres to 160 kilometres in Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Most grain elevators on the Prairies are only served by one railway and expanding inter-switching would allow more service by more rail companies.

Another change would enshrine a previous government order for Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways to move a minimum amount of grain or face a penalty of up to $100,000 a day.

A national priority

NDP Leader Thomas Mulcair has said the prime minister has to make unlogging the backlog of grain a national priority or lose Canada's place in the world market.

- The leader of the Opposition says Canada's reputation is being damaged by its inability to get last year's bumper crop to market.
- He says countries like Japan are going to start looking to the United States since Canada doesn't seem to be able to get its grain to port.

The legislation would not increase the penalty or direct fines to farmers instead of federal coffers, which is what Saskatchewan and Alberta have called for.

Lucky in London. Ontario man wins second jackpot, this time it's a cool million Meet Robert McPhail: London, Ont.'s luckiest man, who claimed the second big lottery prize of his life — $1 million in the March 19 Lotto 6-49 draw.

His first round of luck came in 1992 when he was part of a group of seven that cashed in on $571,157.

McPhail was picking up a newspaper and some chocolates for his wife at a Shoppers Drug Mart when "something told me to buy a ticket," he said.

McPhail ended up buying two tickets for the draw.

"I found out about my win when checking my numbers against those posted in the newspaper," he said. "I was in disbelief. I always thought I would win again — I just didn't know when. My family members keep rubbing me for good luck."

McPhail plans to take a trip to the U.K. with his wife and may take his grandchildren on a fishing trip.

A University of Alberta math professor has figured that if you play twice a week, every week for a thousand years, the chances are better than 99 per cent that you'll never win the jackpot. It's a good thing McPhail isn't a mathematician.

Walking in a winter wonderland — in spring

A pedestrian battles the high winds and blowing snow as he walks in downtown Halifax on Wednesday, where a spring snowstorm packed a bigger punch than any of the storms that hit Nova Scotia during the winter. Halifax was brought to a standstill, with government offices, schools, retailers and transit all eventually shutting down. By 6:30 p.m., winds gusting up to 80 kilometres per hour in Halifax and up to 130 kilometres per hour along the Atlantic coast had caused a near-record-breaking high tide in Halifax Harbour, swamping some coastal wharves and roads. The Veterans Affairs Department is weighing whether federal programs provide enough of a safety net to keep severely injured ex-soldiers from falling into poverty after they turn 65.

Danish zoo defends killing four of its lions

Copenhagen Zoo. This cull has put the zoo on the defensive again, a month after it killed a healthy giraffe

A Danish zoo on Wednesday defended its decision to kill two aging lions and two cubs, citing the risk of inbreeding and the arrival of a new male. This week's cull has put the Copenhagen Zoo on the defensive again, a month after it infuriated animal rights activists by killing a healthy giraffe, dissecting it in public and feeding it to the lions.

In a statement, the zoo said it had to put down the lions to make room for the new, three-year-old male, saying it wouldn't have been accepted by the pride if the older male, 16, were still around.

"Furthermore we couldn't risk that the male lion mated with the old female as she was too old to be mated with again due to the fact that she would have difficulties with birth and parental care of another litter," the zoo said.

The zoo said the cubs were put down because they couldn't fend for themselves and the male would likely kill them. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Zoo officials hope the new male and two females born in 2012 will form the nucleus of a new pride.

122 objects spotted in ocean offer fresh lead

A French satellite scanning the Indian Ocean for remnants of a missing jetliner found a possible plane debris field containing 122 objects, a top Malaysian official said Wednesday, calling it "the most credible lead that we have."

Defence Minister Hishammuddin Hussein said the objects were more than 2,500 kilometres southwest of Australia, in the area where a desperate, multinational hunt has been going on since other satellites detected possible jet debris.

Clouds obscured the latest satellite images, but dozens of objects could be seen in the gaps, ranging in length from one metre to 23 metres. Hishammuddin said some of them "appeared to be bright, possibly indicating solid materials."

The images were taken Sunday. Various floating ob-

Search now size of Alaska

Malaysia announced Monday that a mathematical analysis of the final known satellite signals from the plane showed that it crashed in the sea, killing everyone on board.

- The new data greatly reduced the search zone, but it remains huge — an area estimated at 1.6-million square kilometres, about the size of Alaska.
- Recovering any part of the plane will be tough because of the sheer depth of the ocean — much of it between about 3,000-4,500 metres (10,000-15,000 feet) deep in the search area.

Former cabinet minister. Quadriplegic Steven Fletcher to table assisted-suicide proposal against government policy

A former Conservative cabinet minister who was left paralyzed from the neck down by a 1996 car crash plans to introduce two private member's bills which would allow assisted suicide in some cases.

Steven Fletcher, a Manitoba MP who was dropped from the federal cabinet last summer, is going against government policy with his legislation.

One of Fletcher's two bills would, if passed, allow doctors to help people end their lives under certain restricted circumstances. The second would set up a commission to monitor the system.

"There will be a set of statutory requirements that must be met before the act of physician-assisted death can happen," Fletcher said Wednesday before a Conservative caucus meeting.

He wouldn't go into specific details, saying that will have to wait until after the bills are introduced in the House of Commons on Thursday.

The legislation is likely to face a tough time in the Commons, which last looked at the issue in 2010 and voted against it by a wide margin.

Justice Minister Peter MacKay said he has no interest in starting that debate again.

The Supreme Court of Canada, which in 1993 narrowly ruled against Sue Rodriguez in her much-debated bid for assisted suicide, has agreed to hear another British Columbia right-to-die case this spring. Rodriguez, who had amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or Lou Gehrig's disease, took her own life in 1994 with the help of an anonymous doctor.

"When I reflect back on the Sue Rodriguez case, I really felt that she should have been able to legally receive what was ultimately done," Fletcher said.

Police, mental health leaders discuss how to prevent tragedies

It's a national conversation that's finally taking place.

Amid growing concern over how police deal with some of society's most vulnerable, law enforcement officials, those who live with mental illness and those who support them have gathered to discuss how to avert tragedies during crises.

That dialogue, deemed the first of its kind, comes at a time when statistics suggest one in five Canadians experience a mental health illness in any given year.

"It's a major step forward and a very bold step forward," said Louise Bradley, CEO of the Mental Health Commission of Canada, host of the conference in Toronto with the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police.

One of the key issues police and mental health advocates have to grapple with is the lack of national standards: there isn't a country-wide training curriculum for officers on how to deal with the mentally ill, nor is there comprehensive data collected on the issue.

Vancouver Police Chief Jim Chu, who's also president of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, says "police are increasingly becoming the mental health response agency of first resort." THE CANADIAN PRESS

U.S.-Russia mission. Soyuz delays docking, Ukraine crisis not related

A software glitch on a Russian spacecraft heading to the International Space Station has delayed the arrival of three astronauts, including an American. NASA said the crew was in no danger, and the U.S.-Russia space partnership was strong despite tensions over Ukraine.

The Soyuz spacecraft carrying Russians Alexander Skvortsov and Oleg Artemyev and NASA's Steve Swanson blasted off successfully early Wednesday and was scheduled to dock six hours later. But because of the glitch, the arrival was pushed back until late Thursday.

Safety Board investigator Ted Turpin said the woman had been working as an operator for about two months and acknowledged she'd previously fallen asleep on the job in February, when her train partially missed a station.

Arctic talks continue despite rocky relations with Russia

Diplomacy. International politicians concerned about how country's actions in Ukraine may affect the situation up north Canada may be upset at Russia over Ukraine, but conversations with the country continue over the Arctic.

Government officials confirm that a Russian delegation is attending a meeting in Yellowknife this week held by the Arctic Council, an eight-member group of countries that ring the North. All members are attending, even though the council includes some of Russia's harshest critics, such as Canada and the United States.

"The prime minister has instructed Canadian officials to review all bilateral interactions with Russia," said Amanda Gordon, spokeswoman for Environment Minister Leona Aglukkaq, the current head of the council.

"For the moment, however, Arctic Council work does continue as planned."

The Yellowknife meeting began Tuesday and continues until Thursday. The delegations are being led by bureaucrats, not politicians, and are all closed to the media.

It's the second time senior Arctic officials have met since Canada assumed its two-year chairmanship of the council.

In Europe this week, Harper questioned the mentality of the Russian government, which has said Canada has no right to speak out against Russia's moves against Ukraine. Some government departments have already reduced their contact with Russia.

Speaking Tuesday in Washington, D.C., Transport Minister Lisa Raitt said her department is one of them.

"In my own portfolio we have looked at where there are points of contact, and we have stopped those points of contact," she said. "We are taking this very seriously, and it goes through the entire government."

Most of the Arctic Council's work involves the collection and sharing of scientific, environmental and social information between member countries and six aboriginal groups that have permanent observer status. The council has negotiated binding agreements that include deals on Arctic search and rescue and the prevention of oil spills.

The truth is out there

Dwarf planet found in 'celestial wasteland'

Peering into the far reaches of the solar system, astronomers have spied a frozen pink world 12 billion kilometres from the sun.

It's the second such object to be discovered in a region of space beyond Pluto long considered a celestial wasteland. Until now, the lone known resident in this part of the solar system was an oddball dwarf planet spotted in 2003 named Sedna after the mythological Inuit goddess who created the sea creatures of the Arctic.

The new object, 2012 VP113, was tracked using a new camera on a ground telescope in Chile.

Like Sedna, VP is also a dwarf planet. It's jokingly nicknamed Biden after Vice-President Joe Biden because of the object's initials.

It measures about 450 kilometres across. By contrast, Earth is about 12,713 kilometres across.

CATCHING DREAMS

Day 1: the Problem
Day 2: the Plan
Day 3: the Promise

Critics speak

They threw out our work, say Liberals

Despite Prime Minister Stephen Harper's claim that his First Nations education bill is "historic" and "long overdue," Carolyn Bennett remembers when the Liberal Party made a similar attempt years ago.

The aboriginal affairs critic and Toronto MP pointed to the 2005 Kelowna Accord, a broad-sweeping piece of legislation that sought to close the gap between First Nations communities and the rest of Canadian society.

It was scrapped in 2007

in a vote after the Conservatives were elected.

"The fact that the Kelowna Accord was thrown out was very upsetting," Bennett told Metro. "The Liberals are serious about this and want to carry on the work that was begun with Kelowna."

Bennett also had few kind words for how the current government formulated its First Nations education bill. She called the initial attempt, which was introduced in November and is now undergoing revision, a complete disaster.

"There needs to be an understanding that bottom-up is the only way this will work," she said. "More paternalism and more tablets coming down from on high just serves to irritate people such that they can't even hear what you're saying."

"More paternalism and more tablets coming down from on high just serves to irritate people."

While Bennett conceded that Harper's promise of $1.9 billion for on-reserve education over seven years is comparable to former Liberal Prime Minister Paul Martin's promise of $1.7 billion over five years, she focused her criticism on how each administration arrived at the conclusion.

"(The Kelowna Accord) started with hundreds of people in a room, deciding what will be the priorities and then dividing up into working groups and 18 months later coming up with a real plan with the dollars attached," she explained.

By contrast, she said, the Conservatives have imposed their views without proper consultation and have delayed the injection of funds into the system.

"We found out when the budget was tabled those monies won't fall until next year," she said. "So in some ways it was one step forward and two steps back."

However, Bennett added there is some evidence the Conservatives have been listening and eagerly awaits the release of the newly drafted document.

"This is about fixing the greatest social injustice in Canada," she said.

Chance

Upheaval is coming for First Nations schools. The federal government is planning to invest nearly $2 billion into the neglected system and give communities more control over their own education. Metro travelled to two on-reserve schools to document their condition, the details of the plan and why many people say the proposed changes may be their kids' last chance.

The First Nations Control of First Nations Education Act. Metro tracks down answers to the big questions about the government's solution

JACOB MORGAN
Metro in Saskatoon

How much will it cost?

That's the main question.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper has committed a total of $1.9 billion. This includes $1.25 billion to run the system beginning in 2016 and increasing 4.5 per cent annually, $500 million for infrastructure over seven years beginning in 2015 as well as $160 million for transitional costs over four years beginning in 2015.

Shawn Atleo, national chief of the Assembly of First Nations, tells Metro the 4.5 per cent escalator is a step in the right direction.

"We've been advocating for years to break the two per cent cap," said Atleo, referring to the limit placed on education funding increases in the '90s, which doesn't adequately account for inflation and population growth.

What will curriculum look like at on-reserve schools?

One of the prime minister's catchphrases is "a comparable system." The goal is to create First Nations curriculums and high school diploma qualifications that those offered in non-aboriginal schools.

In addition, the government has promised to continue consulting with indigenous communities — after its original draft proposal was met with condemnation last fall — to incorporate language and cultural programs that reflect the unique heritage of all 633 First Nations across the country.

$1.9-billion budget announcement that they made," said Atleo.

How will the new act change control of First Nations education?

Until now the Indian Act has governed First Nations education. Since the end of the residential school era, Ottawa has directly administered the system.

The new bill will create First Nations education authorities, which will function similarly to school boards in the provincial system. Authorities will govern schools on a local level and ensure they meet national and provincial standards.

Bernard Valcourt, minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, tells Metro that First Nations communities will appoint their own authorities, which can represent an area or a single school.

"I don't want to control education," said Valcourt. "I want First Nations to control education and First Nations will have options."

Will there be accountability?

The First Nations education authorities will oversee administrators and require annual reports. The regular reporting is designed to ensure teachers are certified and standards are met.

Atleo said accountability is a two-way street and both sides are responsible.

"They moved away from requiring or suggesting ministerial oversight," he said. "Now we're talking about reciprocal accountability."

should already have that power. “It’s not their jurisdiction to be telling us what to do,” she said.

She added that the AFN doesn’t speak for Onion Lake, as “it’s not an inherent rights holder, it’s an organization developed and funded by the government.”

Critics speak

Too much we don’t know, says NDP

The aboriginal affairs critic for Canada’s opposition party has “major concerns” about the federal government’s plan to improve First Nations education.

Announced back in February, the First Nations Control of First Nations Education Act would inject more than $1.9 billion in additional funding to address a financial shortfall for on-reserve education, starting in 2015.

But critics of the bill have questions on how — and when — the act will be implemented.

“We actually haven’t seen any legislation at this point, and what my concern is, is that the process of how this is going to be drafted is unclear,” said Jean Crowder, aboriginal affairs critic for the New Democratic Party.

“From our perspective, you can’t draft this legislation without having First Nations at the table.”

Although the federal government held eight face-to-face consultations, 54 informational briefings and received 631 responses to an online survey while drafting the original First Nations Education Act, it was widely rejected.

And with the federal government’s recent announcement having little information on how First Nations will be consulted, Crowder said it’s hard to know what its

the fact money doesn’t start flowing until after the 2015 federal election raises questions for her and her supporters.

“I can’t speak to their motivation on it, but judging by the emails and letters I’m getting in my office, nobody’s being fooled,” she said.

“People recognize the money doesn’t flow until after a federal election, and given past history, just because people say one thing before an election doesn’t mean they’re going to do the same thing after.

“I think the timing is very suspicious,” she said.

But Bernard Valcourt, federal minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development Canada, says the act has nothing to do with the upcoming election.

“I dismiss these charges ... (of) pure political partisanship on (the) part of the people who would rather not have us in government.

“A lot of work has been done. This has been evaluated and looked at by First Nations all across Canada. We’ve received their views, we’ve got the AFN resolution, we’ve got the open letter of the national chief and we have identified a way forward.”

Jean Crowder, NDP critic for aboriginal affairs CONTRIBUTED outcome will be.

“I don’t know if there’s two people in a closed room putting it together, whether it’s going to have regional representation from across the country,” she said.

While Crowder feels the government’s acknowledgment of the funding gap is a step in the right direction,

BlackBerry beckons business with security software in BYOD era

Bring your own device.

As more staffers use personal phones to conduct business, the Waterloo tech firm aims to provide peace of mind

BlackBerry Ltd. has received certification for U.S. government employees to use its Secure Work Space enterprise software on iPhones and devices that use the Android operating system.

The technology is part of products that became available through the rollout of its BlackBerry 10 operating system.

The Waterloo, Ont.-based company says the software helps government and business employees use mobile devices of their choice with lower security risks.

Lawsuit launched

In other developments yesterday, chief executive John Chen says he's fighting against future product leaks by filing a lawsuit that he hopes will set an example.

- Chen alleges that an unnamed person stole confidential details about a future BlackBerry product and leaked them to the public.

The certification will give security-conscious organizations, like U.S. and Canadian government agencies, the ability to use software which separates sensitive corporate data from personal content on a single mobile device.

More technology companies have been chasing the lucrative business market as BlackBerry's popularity waned. Both Google and Apple developed their own enterprise software designed to attract government agencies and corporations.

BlackBerry has relied on its strong reputation for security to help rollout a series of new security options linked to BlackBerry 10.

This week, the company announced that it's about to launch an update to its popular BBM chat service that it hopes will generate extra revenue.

Part of the plan includes a more secure level of BBM for smartphones on corporate accounts that companies would pay extra to use.

BlackBerry is also working on launching a new BBM Shop that deals in virtual goods and would work alongside companies to generate money through sponsorship deals.

Deal with the devil? It took one man 16 years to get out of loan agreement

It started with an unwanted laptop, and it ended in Britain's Supreme Court.

A Scottish man on Wednesday won a 16-year court battle sparked by a wrangle over a loan he'd taken out to buy a computer.

Oil worker Richard Durkin bought a laptop from a store in the Scottish city of Aberdeen in 1998, using a credit agreement with lender HFC Bank for about 1,500 pounds. He returned the computer the next day because it lacked an internal modem, and tried to cancel the credit deal.

The bank said he couldn't, and after he refused to pay, declared he had defaulted. Durkin said the bad credit rating meant he was unable to buy a house.

Durkin took legal action, and in 2008 — a decade after the purchase — a court awarded him more than 100,000 pounds. That decision was overturned by appeals judges, and the case eventually wound its way to the Supreme Court.

The saga ended Wednesday when five Supreme Court justices ruled that Durkin had "validly rescinded the credit agreement" and awarded him 8,000 pounds ($13,000 US) in damages, a fraction of his initial award. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAILY CHALLENGES OF LIVING WITH CANCER

INCLUDING ACCESS TO NEW TREATMENTS

As Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month draws to a close, relatively little attention has been paid to the thousands of Canadians who are living with advanced colon cancer.

Although these patients add their voices as advocates of screening and primary prevention, they are also faced with the daily challenges of obtaining access to new drugs to treat their disease and manage their symptoms. Timely access to these therapies can greatly affect the quality of life and a patient's ability to prolong it.

"I speak to patients with very advanced cancer daily and I believe there is a false perception that these individuals are always bedridden and incredibly sick," says Barry D. Stein, president of the Colorectal Cancer Association of Canada (CCAC). "In many cases today, if you were to meet someone with advanced colon cancer, you might not even know they were ill."

These patients want to extend their lives and maximize the quality of time they will have with their family and friends. There has been tremendous progress in developing such treatments but there are issues around accessing them. Access also varies across Canada.

The provincial and territorial ministries of health formed the pan-Canadian Oncology Drug Review (pCODR) group in 2010 to ensure a balanced review of newly approved cancer treatments by asking oncology specialists and impartial patient representatives to make recommendations to provincial formularies with regard to the funding of new oncology drugs.

"In principal, pCODR is a good thing," Stein says. "The challenge is that it appears too much emphasis is being placed on economics and not enough on the personal impact of new medicines. Negative decisions on funding greatly impact patients with advanced disease who still have time to live, but are being denied public funding for new and effective treatment options."

"I continue to manage my cancer on a daily basis and I am a huge proponent of awareness to prevent cancer through screening, but I see a huge gap when it comes to public awareness about lack of access to new treatment options," says Stephen Dunn of Toronto. "I know for myself and other patients in a similar situation we simply cannot accept decisions about life-extending treatments based purely on economics."

The Colorectal Cancer Association of Canada is taking the lead to escalate the "access" discussion with Canadians so they understand the nuances of funding new drugs and how important public funding is to patients with advanced cancer.

For more information on the ongoing access issue or to get involved, visit colorectal-cancer.ca.

Tina Radoslav

CONTRIBUTED

You would never know by seeing her at the gym during her daily workout, but Tina Radoslav of Stoney Creek, is living with metastatic colon cancer.

An active, optimistic single mother of three, she is not the image of a patient with advanced cancer most Canadians call to mind.

Five and a half years ago, Radoslav was diagnosed with Stage 4, or metastatic, colon cancer. That day changed everything in her life.

"I was leaving the doctor's office with my mom and saying to her ... 'I can't do this.' Mom replied, 'You can do this, you will do this!'"

An advanced cancer diagnosis has presented challenges for Radoslav beyond her health. Her husband of 25 years left their marriage 18 months into her cancer journey. Her employer let Radoslav go because it was not prepared to deal with her diagnosis and the time off she would need for treatments. Her life has changed, but, in her own words, she is "still alive."

Colorectal Cancer Association of Canada

"Be your own advocate," Radoslav tells newly diagnosed patients.

She knows this is hard when they are also coming to terms with their diagnoses, but it is essential.

"You are in the battle of your lifetime. Our health-care system is great if you are dealing with a common illness. It doesn't work as well when you are dealing with an advanced form of cancer.

"Metastatic cancer is not a one-size-fits-all disease. Some options stop working or don't work as well on one patient as they do on another. We suffer when we cannot access all the treatments and protocols that can benefit us. Sometimes it feels as if patients living with cancer are just looked upon as an economic burden to the system. I strongly believe you cannot put a price tag on a life and I am sure my children would agree."

As Colon Cancer Awareness month comes to a close, Radoslav wants Canadians newly diagnosed with advanced disease to get the support they need. She wants them to make their voices heard.

"Make sure you are aware of the treatment options possible. Talk to your health-care team. Advocate to the government to make new treatments available. I have had to fight for treatments, and everyday I am thankful to be here."

I SURRENDER, MOTHER NATURE

OK, winter, I give up.

Forget discontent. This is the winter of our disbelief.

Mother Nature went from her usual fickle and frigid self to full-on cruel and cold-hearted. Bing Crosby's White Christmas gave way long ago to Game of Thrones' Winter Without End. Jack Frost bit my nose off and spat it in my face.

We were once in a snow globe, but now we're trapped Under the Dome, scratching at the glass and screaming for anyone to let us out.

As I write this, the Maritimes is being hit with the sort of storm that usually gives rise to over-the-top, two-word blends like polar vortex, frostquake or snowpocalypse. By the time you read this, the blizzard may well be known as a Sleet Scream, The Parthenon Freeze or Icetrocity 2014.

Meanwhile, in Toronto, it's been cold for so long that my friends and I are deeply excited that the forecast for the

HE SAYS

John Mazerolle

metronews.ca

week includes such mercies as 10 degrees and rainy, which will give us at least one day to dream that we're Vancouverites adrift in a warmish sea of cappuccinos and cannabis.

(This column is least relevant for Vancouver residents, but just replace the word "snow" with "rain," the word "cold" with "drab" and the words "We're all in this together" with "Get bent.")

The predicted improvement from insufferable weather to unpleasant weather had given me hope that things were improving, but then I saw a new headline on Wednesday: "WINTER-LIKE WEATHER TO CONTINUE UNTIL AT LEAST MID-APRIL."

It's funny how your eyes play tricks on you, because when I first glanced at the headline I read it as "LEAP FROM THE BUILDING IMMEDIATELY." I thought about it, but figured the snow would probably break my fall anyway.

Which leads me back to my original thought: I give up. I have no more rage, no more despair to give. The tears only freeze on my face. The seven-day forecast has pushed me through the seven stages of grief and it's time to accept my frosty fate.

I accept that it's going to be winter forever. And I for one welcome our new, flakey overlords.

Why, winter year-round will be grand.

Patio weather will be any time we want, there'll be no annoying change of car tires, no suffering through another bus-stop simpaton asking, "Hot enough for ya?"

Hockey in June will make perfect sense, the cars-versus-bikes feud will end, and a balaclava will provide all the SPF protection you need.

No smog, no humidity, no insects. No summer love means no summer heartbreaks.

Endless winter will mean being comfortably numb, with smiles frozen on our faces.

I give up, winter. You win. I am yours, and you're all right.

A naysayer might claim I have Stockholm syndrome, but I checked. It's 14 and sunny there.

Uncle, Mother Nature. Uncle.

10,000-calorie, beastly burger

Substantial sandwich inspired by a cartoon

The 10,000-calorie whopper, dubbed the Ulti-Meatum, was cooked up by restaurant owners Corinne and John Clarkson after seeing the meat feast on Cartoon Network's The Regular Show.

The monster meal includes five pounds (2.2 kilograms) of meat and a cheeseburger within a burger just like in the children's animation. The owners of the Mister Eaters fish and chips restaurant in Preston, England, are offering up a man-versus-food challenge where daring punters can eat for free if they can finish the burger in one sitting. METRO

Q & A with John Clarkson, one of the creators

Special plate needed to hold it

Was this as much a personal challenge as anything else?

Yeah, I enjoy it and it's a bit of fun. I'm a butcher by trade and I'm familiar with meat and how it sticks together, so I thought I'll have a go. We've done the world's biggest deep-fried Ferrero Rocher at 11 pounds (five kilograms) in weight and that went global, so I thought I could do the same with this. It gets people talking; the shop's been overwhelmed.

Did you have any problems building the burger?

We had three or four flops. I had to design a plate with pins that are the same height as the burger, so that it doesn't topple over. The thing with my burger is that it's not messy when you cut it open — you get a really nice cross-section as you can see in the picture.

Local gal rules the gaming world

Game on! Writer Genevieve LeBlanc reminds us geek culture has never really been a boys' club

BACKSTAGE PASS
Jen Traplin
ottawa@metronews.ca

Genevieve LeBlanc, a psychology student, writer and self-professed full-time nerd, has always been into video games, thanks to the influence of her older brother.

"I remember watching him play Crash Bandicoot and Spyro on our old PlayStation and really wanting my own GameBoy when I was little so that I could play Pokemon," she says. "I still have the old PlayStation and my pink GameBoy. I even play my old Pokemon games sometimes."

LeBlanc, like many gamers, quickly immersed herself in geek culture, where she felt instantly at home. Now she's the first Canadian contributing writer for NerdReactor, a popular online portal for gamers, geeks and cosplayers alike.

"I was kind of the stereotypical nerdy kid when I was little, really socially awkward. I made most of my friends through a mutual interest in anime, games, comics and other nerdy stuff," she says, adding that her involvement in the culture expanded naturally from there — even dressing the part.

Genevieve LeBlanc is a contributing writer at NerdReactor.com CONTRIBUTED

"I went to my first convention when I was about 13 and knew that cosplay was something that people did at conventions. I knew how to sew, but had never made clothes before so that first costume was pretty terrible compared to what I can make now. But, people didn't really care that my costume sucked. I was hooked."

While there are a lot of geeky ladies just like LeBlanc actively participating in the world of gaming, she says there can still be misogynistic undertones within the culture, pointing to Anita Sarkeesian as an example.

In 2012, Sarkeesian was the target of a nasty online harassment campaign, all because she launched a Kickstarter project to fund a series of short videos examining the portrayal of men and women in video games.

"When she wanted to talk about the representation of women in games, people threatened her personal safety," says LeBlanc, who's also been on the receiving end of threatening comments online.

"The good news is those kinds of people are a minority. Many male gamers welcome us with open arms."

So they should. She notes that ESA (the Entertainment Software Association) research shows that 47 per cent of gamers are women and adult women actually outnumber teenage boys when it comes to gaming.

Selena, stop hitting repeat-peat-peat on that relationship: Parents

Selena Gomez's parents are reportedly gearing up for another intervention for the former Disney star, hoping a return trip to rehab and distance from on-again, off-again boyfriend Justin Bieber will get her back on the straight and narrow, according to Life & Style Weekly. Their last attempts to convince Gomez to seek help for anxiety and alleged substance abuse issues went well, with Gomez voluntarily checking into the Meadows treatment facility in Arizona — but she checked herself out two weeks later to rush to Bieber's side in the wake of his legal troubles. And she's been spotted with the troubled Canadian pop star regularly since then, most recently this past weekend in L.A. when she stopped by the Sunset Towers Hotel for a quick visit with Bieber. Sources tell the magazine that Gomez's parents want her to ditch Bieber for good and head back to Meadows to complete her six-week program.

What should a sensitive GOOP-ified husband do to comfort his soon-to-be-ex-beloved in their time of conscious uncoupling? Put a bird on it, of course.

Chris Martin and Gwyneth Paltrow are clearly making an effort to ensure that even their divorce is expensive and classy. Apparently Coldplay front man Martin even bought Paltrow a parting gift — an etching of a bird by Polish artist Mila Fürstová, created as cover art for a Coldplay album, a source told the Daily Mail.

"The fighting is over now, there's no bitterness. They're actually going to have some fun," the source said.

There's the picture above. It's pretty cool and the sort of thing that Chris Martin and Gwyneth Paltrow would have in their living room.

It seems unfair that even their divorce is cooler than me. Or maybe not: Mila Fürstová's staff denies that Chris Martin bought one of her works "as a gift or for any other reason."

Fashion, at its purest, is about telling stories. And the best storytellers are ones with tales to tell themselves. Here, we look at five individuals making waves in the Canadian fashion industry while weaving their own experiences into the mix.

Nana Osei

Designer, Bôhten Eyeglasses Inc.

It was on a trip to Ghana in 2009 that Nana Osei saw an opportunity to combine his passions for social responsibility and fashion. While still in university in Ottawa, he created Bôhten Eyeglasses Inc. The lightweight eyewear, made of reclaimed wood from West Africa and handcrafted in zero-waste facilities in Canada, have been drawing national attention. He's even appeared on the Dragon's Den. In the future, Osei hopes to bring the manufacturing to Africa as well. "People say there's nothing you can do about some things, but I say it always just starts small," says Osei.

who stitched their story into a style career

Meredith Wright

Filmmaker, Agency

After modelling for several years around the world, and being turned off by the way models were treated everywhere she went, Wright wanted to expose some of the darker sides of the industry. The end result was Agency, a documentary about young girls working for a modelling agency in Japan. Shot through Wright's own perspective, living in an apartment with fellow models in Osaka, Japan, the film aims to get people asking questions about the industry they normally wouldn't. "If I told someone that underage girls were working with no representation, they would be upset," says Wright. "So why is it OK when it's for fashion?"

Lolitta Dandoy

Blogger, Fashion is Everywhere

With a mix of French and English posts on Fashion is Everywhere, Dandoy is the quintessential Montrealer. As a fashion journalist, she'd always wanted to start her own publication. Faced with a cancer diagnosis several years ago, while convalescing at home, she decided to go for it. Surrounded by so much creativity in Montreal, she tries to capture an awareness in her blog that the fashion community is in fact a community and has a greater meaning beyond superficial consumerism. "When somebody doesn't feel right in their skin, a lot of that can have to do with their appearance," says Dandoy. "It can change things you don't expect."

Julia Che

President, Lotus Leaf Communications

After studying fashion communications at Ryerson University, Che was working in public relations in Toronto when she noticed a friend, who is a talented jewelry designer, needed help promoting her product. Thus, Lotus Leaf Communications was born. They now represent big-name clients like 7 For All Mankind, Dr. Martens and Manitobah Mukluks. And while they've grown exponentially from that first client, at the end of the day, Che has used the company's success to give back to the community. "Agents of Change is a branch of Lotus Leaf," says Che. "Through it, we can use our expertise to increase awareness about social issues."

Jigme Nehring

Founder, Mine & Yours

After living in Los Angeles, where the buy-sell-trade concept is common, Jigme Nehring decided to bring the model to Vancouver. Her resale shop, Mine & Yours is a place where women can purchase, sell or trade their gently used clothing. Nehring emphasizes the business's aspect of giving women the chance to recycle and find good homes for items that might otherwise collect dust in the back of their closets. The trouble with the fashion industry, Nehring explains, is the amount of waste it produces, which the shop aims to help negate as much as possible. "Mine & Yours helps reduce waste by extending the life of great pieces that are still in style and encouraging people to buy used clothing over new," says Nehring.

Keep new puppy and your home safe

You can teach a new dog old tricks. Protecting your puppy from harm means your stuff stays intact, too

We bought food bowls, borrowed a crate and dusted off baby gates. But soon after we adopted our 13-week-old puppy, we discovered the house really wasn't ready.

Clove, a Labrador retriever mix, chewed wires we thought were hidden and investigated stairs we thought she'd ignore. She rummaged through deep plastic bins holding smelly shin guards and plucked snow-soaked mittens from our warm radiators. Within a week of her arrival, we had to block off power strips, reorganize our mudroom, devise a new plan for drying winter gear and gate the staircase.

"It's a lot like having an infant in the household," said Pamela Barlow, animal behaviour counsellor at the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals' adoption centre in New York City.

Barlow says puppies need constant supervision and a safe environment to explore. She cautions against confining them so much that they don't get outside experiences. It is hard to go back and socialize puppies if owners miss the window of opportunity to do so.

Puppies are drawn to things they can chew on and are stimulated by things that move, said Dr. Carlo Siracusa, director of the Penn Vet Behavior Service at the University of Pennsylvania.

"Many times we think that we should protect our home from a new puppy," Siracusa said, because the puppy could potentially cause damage. But more important is the opposite: making sure that puppies are safe in their new home.

Most essential is to create a safe haven — a place where the puppy can rest and sleep when there is too much excitement or stimulation, such as when kids have friends visiting, Siracusa says.

NEUTRAL HUES MAY LURE BUYERS

A fresh coat of paint can work wonders to update the look and feel of your home. That's one reason why taking up the brush and roller is often a recommended upgrade when selling. And when it comes to colour, more often than not, your real estate agent will recommend neutral hues.

"The reason we recommend neutrals is that we want prospective homebuyers to picture themselves living in the home," says Carla Bouchard, a broker with Royal LePage Metro. "A pallet that is too strong may not be to everyone's taste — and yet today's neutrals are giving us many more options beyond the typical beige."

Bouchard points out that neutrals today have a lighter touch with a slight shift toward pastels. These colours are popping up in textiles, countertops and carpets, and can be a great complement to furnishings and art.

She recommends the following tactics to choose paint colours to rejuvenate your surroundings and do the heavy lifting should you decide to sell your home.

Select a shade drawn from prominently displayed artwork, accessory or furnishings. Doing so will ensure that your home is one step closer to "show time" if and when you decide to sell.

Consider adjacent rooms. Think about how your chosen colour will interact with adjacent rooms. Strive for complimentary hues from a colour wheel to provide natural flow from room to room.

Consider what time of day the room will be most often used. While you may be tempted to paint a basement room a bright sunny yellow, if the room is to be used most often in the evening, hues of blue, green or grey may be more appropriate.

Bring home a paint sample or oversized paint chip. Make an informed choice and consider how it looks in your room, and under various lighting conditions, before you commit.

ANCO'S MODERN AESTHETICS HOMEBUILDER HAS TWO DEVELOPMENTS IN THE WORKS

Perhaps it's all the interest in reno shows on television, but there is clearly a partiality among today's homebuyers towards a modern aesthetic.

If that's the look you are after, then check out the offerings available through Anco Homes. This developer features the modern homes you expect to only find in urban centres, just outside of the city. But it's Anco Homes' one-on-one service that it feels really sets it apart.

"We're a small company, building around 15 homes per year," says Anco Homes president Jasmin (Jay) Meunier.

"We don't sacrifice quality for quantity, and we take a personal interest in our customers. From start to finish, you'll always be speaking to the same person — from the first viewing of our model homes, through contract signing, construction, selection of bricks, cabinetry, flooring and paint, closing inspection and beyond.

"And being small, we can deal with special requests and work with you on every detail to build the home to your liking."

Anco currently has two developments in the works — Morris Village in the town of Rockland, just 25 minutes east of Ottawa, and Chateau du Village in Wendover, 10 minutes beyond Rockland.

"Prices in Wendover average about $65,000 lower than in Rockland, so the extra 10 minutes offers buyers big savings."

SERVICE IS HALLMARK FOR VALECRAFT HOMES

“We’ve been building new homes in the Ottawa area for over 32 years, and we’ve never missed or delayed a closing date,” says Frank Nieuwkoop, Valecraft Homes director of sales and marketing.

Unlike many homebuilders, Valecraft waits to start selling when the land is registered, so when it commits to a closing date, it can keep that promise.

Service is a hallmark of the Valecraft experience. The company walks potential owners through the process with ease, knowing how different it is for a homebuyer purchasing a new home versus a resell. The after-sale experience is second to none.

“Our owner works closely with our in-house technologists to ensure the customer’s home exceeds all their expectations,” Nieuwkoop says. “That includes the services of a complimentary interior designer who helps each Valecraft family choose the little extras like cabinetry, ceramics, hardwood, and colours to make sure everything blends together just right. This helps owners ensure they’re not only getting features that will make them happy, but will also boost their home’s resale value down the road.”

Valecraft currently has five communities in development across the Ottawa region. The newest communities are Woodroffe Lofts in Barrhaven and Place St. Thomas in Embrun. More established communities include Bradley Estates in Orleans, Aviation Private near downtown Ottawa, and Trailwest, a town-home community in Kanata.

“At Trailwest, we’re offering really special townhome features like oversize garages, 21-foot wide frontages, hardwoods in the living and dining rooms, ceramics in the kitchen, dinette and bathrooms all standard,” Nieuwkoop says.

This excellence in service reaps rewards for homeowners, including $500 cash for referrals, or a $3,000 decor bonus if you are a repeat customer.

Cookbook of the Week

Slow and steady wins health race

In the follow-up to the first edition of The Healthy Slow Cooker, Judith Finlayson takes conflicting information about the changing face of dietary guidelines and balances it with a common-sense approach.

All the recipes in the book are deliciously nutrient-dense and have a rounded approach to meet a wide range of needs.

From soups and entrées to desserts, Finlayson uses the slow cooker to show readers how simple healthy eating can be. Among recipes are Easy Paella, Cheesy Grits, Bistro Fish Soup and more. METRO

Beef and Chickpea Curry with Spinach.

The Indian-inspired flavours will have your taste buds doing a happy dance

"I like to serve this with brown basmati rice, not only because I like its pleasant nutty flavor but also for its nutritional value," writes Judith Finlayson in her book The Healthy Slow Cooker, Second Edition.

1. In a skillet, heat oil over medium-high heat. Add beef, in batches, and cook, stirring, adding additional oil if necessary, until browned, about 4 minutes per batch. Transfer to slow cooker stoneware.

2. Reduce heat to medium. Add onions to pan and cook, stirring, until softened, about 3 minutes. Add garlic, ginger, peppercorns, cinnamon stick and bay leaf and cook, stirring, for 1 minute. Add beef stock and bring to a boil.

3. Transfer to slow cooker stoneware. Add chickpeas and stir well. Cover and cook on Low for 8 hours or on High for 4 hours, until beef is tender. Add curry powder solution and stir well. Add spinach, in batches, stirring until each batch is submerged in the curry. Cover and cook on High for 20 minutes, until spinach is wilted. Discard cinnamon stick and bay leaf. Ladle into bowls and drizzle with yogurt, if using.

Highway to be renamed after freestyle skier

The Ontario government is honouring the late Sarah Burke by dedicating a highway to the freestyle skiing pioneer.

Highway 93 will be known as the Sarah Burke Memorial Highway. The road runs for 24 kilometres through Simcoe County, the region where Burke was born and raised.

"That's a great idea," said Chloe Dufour-Lapointe, Canada's silver medalist in freestyle moguls at the Sochi Olympics. "She was such a great skier, everything that you heard about her was only positive, a girl who smiles."

The 29-year-old Burke, who was born in Barrie and grew up in Midland, died after a training accident in Utah in January 2012.

Bears sign Allen to replace Peppers

The Chicago Bears replaced one accomplished veteran pass rusher with another Wednesday when they agreed to terms with Jared Allen on a four-year contract.

A person with knowledge of the agreement told The Associated Press that Allen will get $15.5 million guaranteed on a deal that could be worth as much as $32 million. The person requested anonymity because the terms have not been announced.

Allen, 31, will take over for Julius Peppers, who signed with Green Bay as a free agent after being released by the Bears.

Djoker pulls fast one on Murray

Novak Djokovic benefited from an erroneous call and claimed he didn't realize he had broken the rules. When Andy Murray walked to the net and challenged him about it, Djokovic responded with a shrug and a sheepish smile.

Murray lost the dispute, and the match. The pivotal ruling helped Djokovic win 7-5, 6-3 in the quarter-finals of the Sony Open.

McGowan lands in Blue Jays' rotation

MLB. Embattled hurler named fifth starter as team makes final cuts

Dustin McGowan admits he was "speechless" when he was told Wednesday morning he would open the season in the Blue Jays' starting rotation.

It's tough to blame the 32-year-old right-hander — or anyone else who has followed his star-crossed career, for that matter. McGowan hasn't cracked an opening-day roster in six years and hasn't started a major-league game since September 2011. His career looked all but over barely a year ago, as he rehabbed from yet another season-ending shoulder surgery.

But now he's going to start the Jays' home opener against the New York Yankees on April 4, in front of a sellout crowd.

once that day comes," McGowan said after hearing the news. "It's an honour and I really can't wait to do it."

The Jays settled their starting rotation and made their final cuts on Wednesday, sending struggling left-hander J.A. Happ to the 15-day disabled list (back) and retaining all three of their on-the-bubble arms — Todd Redmond, Esmil Rogers and Jeremy Jeffress — in an eight-man bullpen. The right-handers were all out of options, meaning they could not be sent to the minors without first clearing waivers, and would likely be lost if they didn't make the team.

Josh Thole was also named as the backup catcher over Erik Kratz, who will report to Triple-A Buffalo.

Once considered a lock for the starting rotation, Happ lost the job after a terrible spring, during which he missed a start due to soreness in his back.

On Tuesday, after Happ gave up seven runs in another disappointing outing, both he and manager John Gibbons said his previous injury was a non-issue. So on Wednesday, when the club announced he was being added to the disabled list, it seemed a convenient excuse to allow them to keep him out of the rotation while at the same time keeping their other pitchers off the waiver wire.

But GM Alex Anthopoulos said Happ admitted on Wednesday morning his back is not 100 per cent. "Clearly he's not right and I think he realized it as well."

DeLaet on course for mastery at Augusta

PGA. Canadian golfer not daunted by first bid for Green Jacket

Graham DeLaet won't be so much in awe of Augusta National Golf Club when he makes his Masters debut next month.

The native of Weyburn, Sask., made a trip to the fabled golf course last week. Although bad weather prevented him from playing a full round, he did walk the par-72, 7,435-yard layout and make mental notes regarding the lay of the land.

"It was drizzly rain and cold the first day and it was pretty tough on my body to swing in that kind of cold with that many layers on," DeLaet said during a conference call Wednesday. "But it was still very worthwhile to go and see the course ... and kind of get the 'wow' factor out of the way. It (the course) was pretty much perfect."

An ardent television viewer of past Masters tournaments — including Canadian Mike Weir's 2003 championship — DeLaet said actually walking the course was a learning experience.

And from what DeLaet saw, he has the game to potentially succeed at Augusta.

"I do feel the golf course suits my game pretty well," he said. "I mean, it's a big golf course.... You have to drive it well and hit your irons precisely."

On Tuesday, Weir, of Bright's Grove, Ont., told reporters he felt DeLaet, 32, could contend at Augusta.

"I think Graham obviously has the type of game that can do very well there," Weir said. "He hits it long, he hits it very high."

DeLaet said he always has butterflies when he hits his first tee shot to officially open a tournament. But having played previously in the British Open as well as last year's President's Cup, DeLaet feels he knows what to expect heading into his first Masters.

Stick-swinging ban for Knights goaltender

London Knights goaltender Anthony Stolarz has been suspended eight games for swinging his stick at the head of Windsor Spitfires forward Josh Ho-Sang, the Ontario Hockey League team announced Wednesday.

In the first period of London's incident-filled 10-2 victory in Game 3 of their first round series on Tuesday night, Ho-Sang jabbed his stick at the goaltender after a play at the net. As the Spitfires star skated away, Stolarz took a one-handed swing with his stick and hit Ho-Sang on the back of the head. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Sochi 2014. High-flying freestylers touch down

It's been a whirlwind couple of months for Mikael Kingsbury that included winning an Olympic silver medal and capturing his third consecutive overall World Cup title.

Now the Canadian moguls skier can't wait to put his feet up.

"I'm a Habs fan. I love hockey," Kingsbury said. "The thing I'm most excited for is to have a full day off, have a chance to sit on my couch with a beer, because we don't drink much during the World Cup circuit."

But first, there are interviews and public appearances and the Canadian freestyle championships this weekend at Apex Resort in Penticton, B.C.

Kingsbury, and moguls sisters Justine, Chloe and Maxime Dufour-Lapointe — among Canada's biggest stories at the Sochi Olympics — finally touched down on Canadian soil on Tuesday, and did the media rounds in Toronto on Wednesday.

The foursome was at Ryerson University to be honoured by Toronto Deputy Mayor Norm Kelly.

Justine Dufour-Lapointe won moguls gold at the Sochi Olympics, while 22-year-old sister Chloe captured silver, and the image of the Montreal sisters holding hands before stepping onto the medal podium will be one of the most enduring images of the Games.

Maxime, 25, was 12th in Sochi.

Last week, the sisters finished second through fourth in the season's overall World Cup moguls standings; Justine finished second, followed by Chloe and Maxime.

Kingsbury, a 21-year-old from Deux-Montagnes, Que., finished second to Canadian teammate Alexandre Bilodeau at the Sochi Olympics, then claimed his third straight Crystal Globe as the season World Cup winner.
